I would like to hear if you like this format better. I think this will be easier to help keep track, but without becoming overbearing in my reports. As we can see, numbers have continued the trend of dropping. Inexplicably, Reddit – for a reason I am not quite aware of – has increased in membership. Discord dropped quite drastically in comparison to Telegram in numbers; however, the explanation is that Anwar took some time out one day to go through memberships to eliminate bots/scam/spam that had slipped through the captcha or were stuck on the captcha and were obvious. Therefore this comparison is not precise, but I will say it wasn't the same number of bans as we see membership loss above and merely contributed.

I have successfully created the CFC Nomination thread and related material such as the blog post. I believe I have added each of you who have said you are re-running. If you are running for reelection, and you don't see yourself on that list please let me know ASAP so I can add you to the list for reelection. I have to once again apologize that, because of all of this, my Reddit post about Firo tech has been delayed and has wound up on the back burner for now. I hope you all understand. I do have a partial draft of it, and will finish it once I am finished with the duties for the CFC Elections and upcoming tokenomics re-visitation discussions. This is not to say I will not be working on it at all, but it is currently the lowest priority.

I have created an off-topic channel for Firo on Telegram and had it bridged to the off-topic channel over on Discord. While I am really glad our community has become very friendly, and the casual conversation over in the main channel made everything feel more like a proper community, I did feel like it was necessary. My reasonings were that people, including myself, would enjoy talking about things that were too far off topic for the other channels, and this new channel gives everyone the freedom to do so without any concerns, but allows us to maintain the friendly chit chat of our community. Our off topic discussions would occasionally take away from more serious discussions and topics. I was partially concerned that the membership loss – especially those that were leaving Firo Project channel, but remaining in other channels – such as Firo Trading – were indicators that the off topic conversations were driving people away. Perhaps because they could not read the discussions they wanted, or that it resulted in too many replies in chat making it harder for them to keep up with actual project developments, etc.

The BPSAA has now setup the website in such a way that each project can provide news and quarterly reports. I will be taking on this responsibility and will be writing the news as well as the quarterly reports for them to the best of my ability. This has numerous potential benefits, including the fact that one of the individuals over there will be helping us find keywords/triggerwords to get such news and reports trending on search engines such as Google.
